The following list of political and semi-political organizations and newspapers in the Ho Chi Minh-controlled zones of Vietnam has been compiled from overt sources and is disseminated as a general summary of their history from the founding of the Viet Minh in 1941 to its merger with the Lien Viet in early 1951.

Founded in 1941 by the Communist Party of Indochina (PCI) as a broad-based militant nationalist movement and comprising workers', youth, peasants' and women's National Salvation Associations which were formed simultaneously.

The Viet Minh was not only a political but a military organization and the members of the Union of Youth for National Salvation formed the first unit of what was later to be the Viet Minh National Army. In 1949 Viet Minh propaganda began to urge that the Viet Minh League should be merged with the Lien Viet and by the end of 1950 this process was completed on the lower levels while at the top the joint Viet Minh-Lien Viet Committee had been formed. The Viet Minh was finally merged with the Lien Viet in February 1951 and the League as a separate body disappeared.

"As the policy of the Party is to work for the interests of the country and people, to place the interests of the country and people above all, and as it embraces the most determined and model citizens of the Resistance, the Vietnam Laodong Party is the most patriotic Party, the Party of the workers and toiling masses, and also the Party of the people. Its leader is also the leader of the people, our beloved President, Ho Chi Minh.

"The newly-born Vietnam Laodong Party consequently takes its responsibility before the people and history: to lead the Resistance to victory and national reconstruction to success, and to make Vietnam an independent, free, democratic and prosperous country. The Vietnamese people as a whole are confident that the Vietnam Laodong Party is endowed with necessary qualities and abilities, with enough determination and clear-sightedness,
